

Dear FCC:I want to object to your allowing a few giant corporations control almost all radio outlets (thank God for Internet radio) and also your overreaction to a few words and sights that children might hear or see instead of the violence and smarmy humor that pervades regular television programming (like most recent sitcoms).

But now I find that you are also going after my beloved satellite radio, the answer to the boredom that the giant corporations have inflicted on broadcast radio. Satellite radio provides both the music and talk that enable me to travel anywhere in my car without resorting to replaying the same old tapes and cassettes. Please leave the satellite alone. Let it continue to update the traffic and weather along with its many other blessed functions.

Sincerely,

Bryan H. Bunch (not a fan of the current FCC!)
